Credentialing supervision

Supervision to organize the process, develop competencies, and apply behavior analysis to real-world professional situations.

I work with students and professionals pursuing credentials related to behavior analysis, as well as with organizations or teams that need to structure a shared training and follow-up process.

Before we begin, we review which credential you are pursuing, where you are in the process, what documentation you have, and which competencies you need to develop. From there, we organize a realistic plan with clear goals, preparation between sessions, and progress monitoring.

How I work

Sessions combine technical review, practical application, and feedback. The goal is not simply to complete hours, but to learn how to make sound decisions that can be sustained in real-world professional settings.

Who it is for

- Students or professionals pursuing a credential who need to organize requirements, hours, documentation, and competencies.
- People seeking individual supervision or supervision in a small group.
- Professionals who want to review cases, procedures, data collection, ethical issues, or intervention planning.
- Organizations and teams that need a shared structure for training, review, and follow-up.

Supervisor profile

I am Antonio Reina Hidalgo, a psychologist qualified to provide healthcare services in Spain and a Board Certified Behavior Analyst (BCBA®). I have worked in Spain, the United States, and Qatar in clinical, educational, residential, and home-based settings. My experience includes intervention, team coordination, training, and applied supervision.

In supervision, I aim to translate the principles of behavior analysis into observable goals, clear procedures, useful data, and decisions that fit each context.

Credentials and official guidance

Each certifying organization has its own requirements, and those requirements may change. The current official guidance is always the primary reference.

QABA	ABAT® · QASP-S® · QBA®
IBAO	IBT® · IBA®

Before agreeing on a plan, we review the current guidance, required hours, permitted format, and available documentation.

About the credentials

Supervision formats

Individual supervision

Individual sessions to review documentation, competencies, questions, cases, or materials and agree on next steps. Sessions may last 60 or 90 minutes.

Group supervision

Small groups of 2 to 5 people, particularly when participants share a university program, professional setting, credential, or similar training needs.

Organizations and teams

Supervision for professionals in training or teams that need a shared structure for work and follow-up. The format and frequency are adjusted to the organization's needs.

Online format

The standard format is online, and sessions can be conducted in Spanish or English.

Supervision content

Content is adapted to the credential, the competencies still to be developed, and each person's professional context. Sessions may address:

- Requirements, documentation, and process planning.
- Observable goals and competencies to be developed.
- Case analysis and functional hypotheses.
- Design and review of intervention procedures.
- Data collection, graphing, and interpretation of results.
- Communication with families, organizations, caregivers, and other professionals.
- Ethical issues, professional boundaries, and decision-making.
- Review of materials, reports, and records.
- Feedback on practice and preparation between sessions.

How the process is organized

1. Initial inquiry

When you contact us, indicate your target credential, country of residence or professional or academic affiliation, preferred format, and current stage in the process.

2. Initial review

We review the current guidance, required hours, available documentation, and training needs.

3. Supervision plan

We agree on the format, frequency, duration, and initial goals.

4. Sessions and preparation

Sessions combine review, practice, feedback, and planning. When useful to the process, we agree on a task or material to prepare for the next meeting.

5. Follow-up and adjustments

We review the plan periodically to assess progress and adjust goals, frequency, or content.

Cases, materials, and confidentiality

If the process includes cases, materials, or supervised practice situations, we can review them as part of the plan as long as the necessary authorization is in place and confidentiality is protected.

Documents and examples must be de-identified. They must not include names, addresses, schools, photographs, clinical records, or other information that could identify a person. If sensitive information needs to be reviewed, an appropriate and secure method must be agreed on in advance.

Supervision fees

International fees are adjusted based on the income level of the country of residence or primary professional or academic affiliation.

Basic terms

Payment

Online sessions are paid in advance. For international payments, payment by card through a payment link, PayPal, bank transfer, or Wise is accepted.

Session scheduling

Frequency and scheduling are agreed on before starting. Changes or cancellations must be communicated in advance. For packages, groups, or organizations, the specific terms are confirmed in writing.

Preparation

To make the most of the sessions, it is helpful to prepare the agreed documentation, materials, or tasks and to let us know if any credential requirement or professional circumstance changes.

Documentation

We organize hours, meetings, competencies, and records according to the agreed plan and current requirements. Each person must also verify that their education, experience, and documentation meet the requirements of the certifying organization.

Confidentiality and data protection

Cases and materials are reviewed using de-identified information and with the necessary authorizations. Identifying information about clients, patients, students, or families should not be sent in the initial inquiry.

Scope and limitations

- Supervision helps organize, develop, and document supervised practice or fieldwork.
- It does not guarantee eligibility, acceptance of hours or documents, passing an examination, or obtaining a credential.
- Certifying organizations may change requirements, forms, or procedures. For this reason, the current official documentation must always be consulted.
- Supervision does not replace university education, required courses, or other requirements established by the certifying organization.
- Reviewing a case in supervision does not make the supervisor clinically responsible for the service and does not replace the authorizations, protocols, or responsible professionals within the organization.

Before starting

We review the credential, format, documentation, and context to confirm that I can provide appropriate supervision. If the service is not a good fit, this will be communicated before the process begins.

Frequently asked questions

Can I contact you even if I do not have all my documentation yet?

Yes. In your initial inquiry, you can explain your situation and which credential you are considering. Before starting, we will review what documentation you have and what you still need to verify.

Can supervision be completed entirely online?

Yes. This is the standard format, as long as it is compatible with the credential requirements and with the activities that must be documented.

Can I join a group?

It depends on the credential, your stage in the process, and availability. Groups have a maximum of five participants and are organized so that participants share goals or similar training needs whenever possible.

Can I review cases from my work?

Yes, as long as this is part of the plan and the requirements for confidentiality, consent, and de-identification are met. Identifying information should not be sent in the initial inquiry.

Does supervision guarantee that my hours will be accepted?

No. We can organize and document the process carefully, but the final decision regarding eligibility, hours, and credentialing rests with the certifying organization.
